OUR SOLUTION

> Much of UQ's history sits unseen. It is scattered across plaques, archives and old buildings, and students who are new to campus or studying from overseas rarely get a way into it. UQ Echo changes that. It is a small, book-inspired storytelling installation that lives in the places students already spend time, like seating areas, lawns and the paths around the lakes. Each story is tied to the spot where it happened, so history stops being something you read about and becomes something you stand inside. It asks for no team, no schedule and no commitment, just a few spare minutes between classes.
>
> Real history is only half of it. UQ Echo also carries the memories and experiences of current students, alumni and staff, so the university's past and present sit side by side. To make that community visible, every contribution grows our Social Garden. This is a Minecraft-style version of the UQ campus, built from blocky sandstone buildings, lakes and trees. Each time someone adds a story, a flower blooms on the user's tree somewhere in that world. The garden fills up with every voice, which makes the community easy to see. It also gives people a reason to add their own stories, since the more people take part, the more alive the campus becomes.

HOW IT WORKS

1 Approach the Book

Walk up to the magic book and it opens.

2 Explore Stories

Browse through stories, watch reels and listen to audio from UQ's past and present.

3 Interact

Like, chat, comment or share your thoughts.

4 See the Garden Grow

Your interaction adds a flower to your tree; thoughts become part of the story.

5 Explore the Map

Discover UQ landmarks as you collect stories.

Inshallah and Vibes

FEATURES

Discover Hidden History

Uncover UQ stories you will never find on a plaque,right where they happened.

Feel Connected

Whether you are new, a local or international, find your place in UQ's story.

Leave Your Mark

Your story stays for the next student and your tree keeps growing as you share.

UQ Map

Discover iconic places across campus as you collect stories.

Join In Your Own Way

No team and no schedule. Spare a few minutes between classes

